Bigger articles lead to bigger engagement...

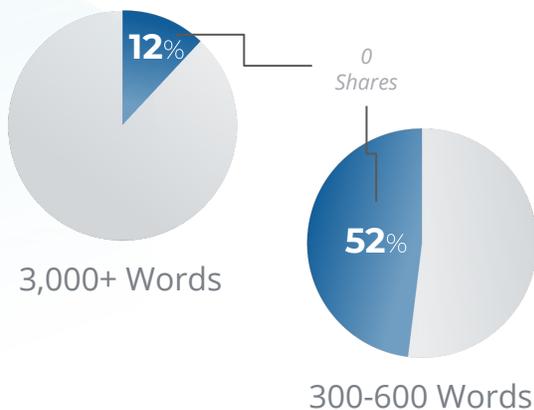

In December 2019, our colleagues at SEMrush published a study on "The Anatomy of Top Performing Articles." And after they analyzed the engagement rates on 700,000+ articles, one set of their key takeaways centered on article length.

Without a doubt, longer articles perform better:

Articles with 3,000+ words get 3x more traffic, 4x more social shares, and 3.5x more backlinks than articles of average length (901-1200 words).

Articles with 3,000+ words get 6.4x more traffic, 4.5x more social shares, and 5x more backlinks than short articles (300-600 words).

Only 12% of articles with 3,000+ words had 0 shares, while 52% of short articles (300-600 words) had 0 shares.

And we've added bigger data to offer further insights...

To take the SEMrush study a step further, we pulled matching word-count ranges from our VoiceGraph index of more than 2 million articles posted 2014-2019 in the Health industry.

Our proprietary VoiceGraph technology indexes more than 73,000 publishers daily and uses machine learning to map articles to more than 200 business categories. Our VoiceGraph index currently includes more than 106,000,000 articles — and rising.

And here are some further questions we were able to answer for Health...

What are the typical article word counts in the Health industry?

When we looked at 270,000 new Health articles published in 2019, we found just under half were still short and sweet (those 300-600 words). Overall, the small percentage of long-form articles shows that there is still ample room to beat competitors in the less-crowded long-form content space.

How does Health compare to other industries?

When we looked at word count data across other major industries in 2019, we found that Health had the lowest percentage of shortest articles (300-600 words) and the highest percentage of medium length articles (601-1200 words). Software & Technology had the highest percentage of long-form articles (those over 1500 words) by a smidge, while Entertainment had the highest percentage of shortest articles (300-600 words).

How have Health article word counts changed?

After analyzing 2 million articles in Health, we found a continuing trend toward longer articles. The percentage of all long-form articles (those over 1500 words) had the highest rate of growth, while the shortest articles (those 300-600 words) had the most significant decline. And the shift has been most pronounced in the past two years.

Key takeaways....

The long-form space is still growing.

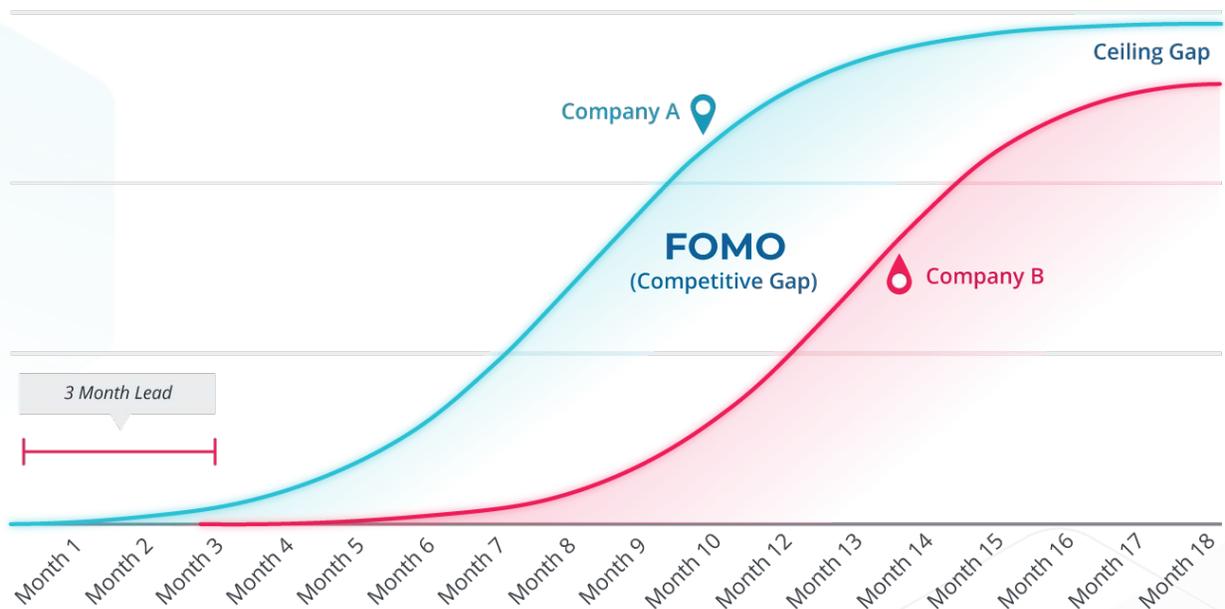

Although long-form articles still represent a small overall percentage of Health articles, there are definitely indications that your competitors might have caught on already, as there is a growing trend from shorter to longer, more authoritative content. Fortunately, the long-form space is still not saturated.

So mind the FOMO gap.

Without a doubt, longer-form content performs better. But don't miss out on organic traffic. The longer you wait to create content, the more traffic you might lose to your competitors. Even short lead times in publishing can lead to long-term traffic advantages, especially if you win the audience share first — and keep on top.
